Roy Newlands

PORTSMOUTH—ROYAL (M.D., W. E. C. Sperring; M., C. H. Johnston; Mus.D., Chas. H. Peters).—"The Speckled Hand" is being presented by the Denville Players this week. This detective story is very capably handled, and its mystery is admirably preserved to the end. Roy Newlands makes a capital study of Holmes, and Paul E. Gordon plays with effect as Dr. Watson. The part of Dr. Rylott is successfully taken by Maurice Jones, and Enid Stoner is charmingly portrayed by Daphne Riggs.

E.B. Norman

PROVINCIAL PRODUCTIONS

"WATSON, SHERLOCK'S, HOLMES"

On Friday, March 15, 1918, was produced, at the Gaiety, Manchester, a "skit," by E. B. Norman, entitled:—

"Watson, Sherlock's, Holmes."

Dr. Watson ..... Mr. Frank Freeman
 Sherlock Holmes ..... Mr. E. B. Norman
 Scene.—A Secluded Spot. Time.—Unlimited but reasonable.

The author introduces a kind of sardonic humour in a duel of words between an Englishman and an American, the former suggesting that the Yankee undertakes war work in the danger zone, while the English Sherlock Holmes directs from a place of safety. Of course, the American is too wide awake to be caught by even a cute detective. Sherlock Holmes invites his American friend Dr. Watson (Wilson) to his rooms. The detective is smart enough to discover a lady's hair on the doctor's coat; he is in love—admits it. Holmes has a great idea as to how the German army could be overcome by quite a simple method. From a study of his Indian library books he has found that the use of a certain white powder might, if it were applied to the German army, send them to kingdom come. Watson inquires as to how it can be administered. The reply is that they share in the glory on condition that Watson disguises himself, goes into the danger zone, and administers the powder. Watson prefers looking after his lady-love to the danger zone. Holmes then explains there is an antidote in a brown packet. He wishes to demonstrate the effect on Watson by taking a dose of the white powder, to be resuscitated afterwards with the brown packet. The Yankee says, "Nothing doing." A cup of tea is suggested. While Watson is bringing the kettle from the fire Holmes appears to be putting the white powder in one of the cups. Watson, suspecting, changes the cups. The detective, aware of the juggling, drinks, and pretends to be overcome. Watson is greatly concerned, and wishes to try the antidote. Holmes, unable to follow the joke further, jumps up laughing, shakes his American friend by the hand, and exclaims, "You're just the same, old boy."

The author, Mr. E. B. Norman, gave a convincing performance as Sherlock Holmes, and Mr. Frank Freeman made his points tell in a cool and calculating Yankee style.
