'Sherlock Holmes' opens tonight

Like the song says, another opening, another show. Fond du Lac Community Theatre members are preparing for their opening performance of the new season tonight with "Sherlock Holmes and the Affair of the Amorous Regent," a new play by John Fenn. Curtain time is 8 p.m. with the production continuing Friday and Saturday at the Goodrich Little Theatre. As Holmes' arch-enemy Prof. Moriarty, Jim Luby, above, appears to be making a point. The one woman who can get the best of Holmes, Irene Adler, talks with Inspector LaStrade, right. Helen Blumer is Miss Adler and George Armstrong is LaStrade. Below, Tom Schmitz as Holmes discusses the case with his sidekick, Col. Watson, played by Mike Harvey. Dick Thomas is the director. Tickets are $3 for adults and $2 for students through high school. They are available at the box office.

Banchory has a reputation for many good things, and not the least of these is the quality and variety of entertainment periodically offered to the community by its local dramatic societies. With the object of augmenting their funds, the John Watson Guild Dramatic Club performed the four-act drama "Sherlock Holmes," in the Banchory Town Hall last night. Judging from the applause with which the production was greeted, there was no doubt of the players' ability to please the audience, and in every way the performance was a success. The acting was of a high standard for amateurs, and reflected great credit on the acting managers, all of whom personally supervised the production. The stage managers had a heavy task to perform, but discharged their duties in a commendable manner. Miss Joan Gibb made a distinctly good impression as Madge Larrabee and played with her usual charm and vivacity. Miss Rita Bell presented the part of Alice Faulkner with fine feeling. Miss Jean Young successfully portrayed Therese the French maid. The outstanding part was in the experienced hands of Mr Alex Sinclair, who was easy and natural in his impersonation of Sherlock Holmes. As Professor Moriarty, Mr John M. Cook made a splendid character study of the Napoleon of crime. The role of Jim Larrabee, a not unimportant one, was filled by Mr Alex Durward with conspicuous ability. Mr Louis D'Agostina displayed much cleverness in the part of Sidney Prince. Mr James Anderson capably portrayed Dr Watson. Among the other characters were:- Mr Alex Watt (John Forman), Mr William Beaton (Bassick), Mr David Hall (Jim Craigen), and Mr Harry Fyle (Billy), who gave of their best, and sustained their parts cleverly. The play is to be repeated tonight and tomorrow night. Aberdeen Journal, Thursday 5 April 1923

Denver.—A one-act sketch by Ruth Bryan Leavitt, daughter of William J. Bryan, is being rehearsed for the Orpheum circuit and will be produced in Salt Lake April 16. Mrs. Leavitt attended a performance at a Denver theater a few weeks ago. She remarked casually she could write a better play than the one they were witnessing. Her friends teased her about it—so much she undertook the work in earnest. The title of the sketch is "Mrs. S. Holmes, Detective." Mrs. Otis Spencer of Denver will essay the leading role and Will Chamberlain will be "Raffles." J. R. Morton of Chicago will also have a part in the play.

SOLDIERS' ENTERTAINMENT. - On Thursday last week a large company gathered at the V.A.D. Hospital, where an excellent concert had been arranged in order to bid farewell to some of the patients. The platform had been tastefully arranged, and thanks are due to the staff and also to friends, who rendered valuable aid. Private Steadleman as "Henry the VIII" was most effective in his description of being married to a widow who had shown her preference for Henrys by marrying seven of them before. Lance-Corporal Keary sang of "Kitty, the Telephone Girl." Miss Digby's fine rendering of "Tatters" and "Husheo" provided a pleasing variety. Mr Webb was most amusing as he mimicked the "Gay Drum Major." After the interval the proceedings reopened with a humorous sketch entitled "The Detective Man," in which the characters were as follows: Hairlock Combs, Private Steadleman: Flashington Fobbs, Private McGrath; Jeremiah Gurkin, Private Whitehead; Clarissa Bung, Private Peary; Jenkins, waiter, Lance-Corporal Mister; Benjamin Bung, Bombardier Cross. Hairlock Combs, in the course of his detective duties, met two whom he strongly suspected as being escaped criminals. Later, these two having heard that the proprietor of a boarding house and his wife were going on holiday, impersonated them and proceeded to instruct the waiter in his duties, hoping that in this way their disguise would throw Combs off the scent. In this they were not successful, for Combs applied for board and lodging. The interlude whistling solo by the waiter was very effective. All being safe for the night, Flashington and Jeremiah proceeded to rob the safe, when Combs descended from his room and apprehended them. Reading Mercury, Saturday 25 December 1915

Before Langdon McCormick wrote "The Burglar and the Lady" for James J. Corbett he must have first read E. W. Hornung's series of "Raffles" stories, then carefully studied the characteristics of Sherlock Holmes, and combined them in his play. He has even named his leading characters "Raffles" and "Sherlock Holmes." To combine two such well known characters is assurance of interest and excitement from start to finish, and this Mr. McCormick has provided.

The play was given its first production by the Girton company at the Grand opera house yesterday. Although it is melodramatic it is not exactly a melodrama, for it contains many bright comedy lines and several strong and truly dramatic situations.

The first presentation yesterday was well given. It is really a star part for "Raffles," having been written for James J. Corbett. George Webb plays this role in the Girton production. This is the best work that Mr. Webb has done at the Grand. He is suited for the role and makes the best of every opportunity. Iva Shepard as Norma Grey does good work, especially in the scenes requiring strong emotional acting. Chester Stevens is a good Sherlock Holmes and Joseph De Grasse makes a well drawn character study of Raffles' assistant, Cripps. The play is well mounted.
